

KAVITA PETERSON

Project Officer | Intern

Kavita Peterson is an emerging Fiji-Indian Australian museums practitioner and researcher from Gunai/Kurnai land with a special interest in decolonial approaches to heritage. They joined AMaGA Victoria in 2024 as part of a pilot internship program in conjunction with Deakin University.

Before joining AMaGA, Kavita worked for many years in international relations and multilingual translation. They hold NAATI accreditation in Japanese to English translation and also work with several other languages, having graduated with a Master of Translation and Interpreting Studies from Monash University. Discovering their calling in museums during the Coronavirus pandemic, they are now in the final stages of a dual award master's program in Cultural Heritage and Museum Studies from Deakin University in Melbourne and World Heritage from Brandenburg University of Technology Cottbus-Senftenberg in Brandenburg, Germany. Their thesis concerns the representation of German colonialism in German national history museums.

When not in the AMaGA Victoria office, Kavita loves karaoke, learning languages, dabbling in too many forms of content creation, and over-analysing films.
